NEW MODELTOYS: WHO WE ARE

New Modeltoys is a small artisanal reality based in Turin, born in 2015 mainly as a hobby. Its founder, Roberto Verardi, moved from Bologna at the end of 2012, but he retained his great passion. By participating in modeling events and craft markets, he came into contact with numerous collectors in the field, establishing friendships with some of them. In 2019, after becoming a part of OPI (Operators of Own Ingenuity), due to the pandemic and the lack of employment opportunities, he dedicated himself full-time to managing his artisanal business, satisfying numerous dozens of customers.

This is a special collection, as it encompasses countless requests from our collectors. It ranges from painting subjects they propose, even if not produced by us, to creating dioramas, and even sculpting historical, current, and sports figures. In some cases, we even create portraits of the clients themselves, making them all unique pieces. Below is their compilation.

THE SCULPTOR:

Roberto Verardi was born in Rome to Bolognese parents. He lived in Bologna until 2012, where he developed a passion for toy soldiers from his adolescence, thanks to a Christmas gift: the 1:35 scale German flak 88 from Tamiya, a beautiful box that even offered the possibility of creating a stunning diorama.

In the following years, after becoming an almost compulsive customer of Tamiya, and especially Italeri products, his desire to create literally exploded. He was always skilled in artistic subjects at school, but he couldn't pursue any formal diplomas in that field due to his parents' opposition. At the age of sixteen, he started showing an interest in modeling human figures, and in 1980, he became a pioneer in the resin 1:35 scale toy soldier. A few years later, Verlinden built the first bases based on this idea, ultimately becoming the number one in this category.

Looking around, he realized that the highest demand was for the 54mm scale, or 1:32 in metal alloy (commonly referred to as the classic lead soldier). The variety here was evident, ranging from unassembled and unpainted kits to various qualities of finished and sculpted pieces.

Some were already assembled and painted, but they were rather unattractive (the famous Toys of the '900), which he didn't really appreciate.

A few months later, he met some executives from Italeri and showed them some of his resin works in the 54mm scale. As a result, they commissioned him to work on some projects in the 1:72 scale in plastic.

As the saying goes, "If Muhammad won't come to the mountain..., It is the mountain that goes to Muhammad." and that's where it all started. The demand for the 54mm category was strong, particularly in metal alloy and as kits. This led him to envision a new product in 54mm with a higher level of modeling compared to the old toys, with more intricate assembly and painting.

In the mid-'90s, he joined an artistic circle in Calderara di Reno, where he met some of the best artists from Bologna and collaborated closely with students of the great master Cleto Tomba, a genius of terracotta figurines.

After going through a divorce and working without much enthusiasm, at the end of '98, he decided to change his life, finally taking control of his destiny! The following year, Vu. Erre Models was born. The next almost five years were filled with success and intense work, collaborating with other producers in the static modeling sector, ranging from scale model cars to toy soldiers of various sizes. Productions for Italeri, Brumm, Bum, Di.bu, Doc Models, Saimex, RCS, etc...

Not to mention collaborations in the high fashion industry: Valentino, Missoni, Dolce & Gabbana, Versace, Armani, Ferragamo, Gucci, etc...

Also collaborations in the art field: Bertozzi & Casoni, Maurizio Cattelan, etc...

Five wonderful years with the birth of a child, but then the crisis of 2004 struck, like a bolt from the blue. Many small and medium-sized enterprises, including his, were forced under the hegemony of the banks and had to deal with the demand for forced loan repayments and more.

It was the end of a dream.

During the same period, his dismay was fueled by serious family problems that followed the work-related issues. That's why he had to abandon his wonderful activity to resolve the major challenges he faced.

He continued to study and work as a hobbyist, never giving up the idea of returning to the market one day with new proposals.

In 2012, after losing his last job due to the earthquake in Emilia, he moved to Turin, consolidating a new love situation.

The general economic crisis didn't help, and not finding a decent job, he thought of reviving his long-desired business. It wasn't easy, but in 2015, he created NEW MODELTOYS, facing an ocean of difficulties. However, he didn't abandon the ship and is still here. The pandemic and now the war haven't helped this existing crisis, but he is sure that we will come back stronger and more alive than ever with our marvelous Made in Italy.
